Odonates of Irinjalakuda ponds of central Kerala, India

One of the ponds sampled. Debris from the waste dumped can be seen floating (© Amitha Wilson).

Dragonflies and damselflies (Odonata) are good indicators of the freshwater ecosystem health because of their amphibious life history, relatively short generation time, high trophic position, and diversity (Corbet 1993). Ponds are home to a diverse community of specialized plants and animals and are hence of great conservation concern. Through land-use changes, ponds have been disappearing rapidly and the remaining ponds are often threatened by contamination and eutrophication, with negative consequences for pond-dependent taxa like Odonata (Janssen et al. 2018). Irinjalakuda is a municipal town in Thrissur

District, Kerala, India. Irinjalakuda has a number of public and private ponds like most parts of the state. Twenty man-made ponds with public access were selected randomly in and around Irinjalakuda for sampling odonates (Figure 1 & Table 1).

The fieldwork was done in the post-monsoon season (November 2019–February 2020). Each pond was visited between 09 AM and 11 AM in sunny weather. The observers walked along the banks of each pond at constant pace for 30 minutes and recorded the species and the number of individuals seen. All individual odonates observed

FOREST FIRE RISK ASSESSMENT AND MANAGEMENT USING GEOSPATIAL TECHNOLOGIES

ABSTRACT

Fire is a natural element present in all ecosystems and influencing many of its functions. The negative impacts include air and water pollution, loss of biodiversity, land degradation, desertification, soil erosion, impairment of human health and safety as well as loss of human life, forest flora and fauna throughout the world every year. Occurrences of forest fires and Ignition factors will be collected from various sources to construct from various sources to construct a GIS database, and then, validate the proposed model. The map will be done using ArcGIS 10.5 software to generate the maps of use and occupation, slope and aspect. Then use MCDM (Multi Criteria Decision Making) methodology in conjunction with fuzzy logic, in a participatory decision making framework to rank and prioritize the causative factors of fire risk in the study area. The study focuses on mapping of forest fire risk in the study area using GIS and remote sensing and then developing a forest fire management system based on topographic and meteorological factors. This mapping will serve as a tool for establishing public power as well as control measures in the areas of high susceptibility.

INTRODUCTION

Forests are an important part of human ecosystem. As per the present record, the world's total forest area is just over 3,999 million hectares (Global Forest Resources Assessment 2015). India has an estimated forest area of 7,08,273 sq. km that covers 21.54% of the total geographic area of the country. After taking into account the changes observed during two assessment periods i.e. ISFR 2015 (updated) and ISFR 2017, there has being an increase of 6,778 sq. km forest cover at the national level. Kerala state has contributed to an increase of 1,043 sq. km. As per the latest investigation done by FSI, about 36% of country's forests are prone to fires and of this; over 10% are severe fire prone areas. Forest fire can cause loss of ecosystem, depletion of wildlife, deforestation, global warming, and adverse health impacts (R.S.Ajin, 2016). The causes of forest fires can be divided into two broad categories. The first one is the 'Environmental', which are beyond control and the second, 'Human related',

This to certify that Mr JERIN JOSE 6th semester BSW student from Christ College, Irinjalakuda, Thrissur has efficiently and effectively served at CHILDLINE, Thrissur from 22nd APRIL 2019 to 20th MAY 2019 as a part of their block placement.

During the tenure he gained experience in the following fields:

- Assist CHILDLINE team to conduct case enquiries and home studies
- Engaged in CHILDLINE special programmes and outreach activities
- Participated in CHILDLINE awareness programme
- Assist CHILDLINE team in documentation process
- Participated in CHILDLINE Open House

This to further certify that the CHILDLINE 1098 service is a 24 hour free emergency phone outreach service for children in need of care and protection. This is a project supported by the Union Ministry of Women and Child Development and linking state Governments and NGOs.

During the period of his service, I found him sincere, pleasant, open to challenge and dedicated with professional attitude. We wish him all the very best in his future career endeavor.

Protecting and empowering children since 1989

4th May 2019

To Whomsoever It May Concern

Butterflies is a registered voluntary organisation working with vulnerable groups of children since 1989. With a rights based, non-institutional approach the organisation endeavours to educate and impart life skills to vulnerable children so that they become self-reliant. Butterflies reaches out directly to over 2000 street and working children in Delhi, 6000 child survivors of tsunami in Andaman and Nicobar Islands and 1200 children living in remote areas of Uttarakhand State.

We are glad to certify that Mr. Farhan V. S. of Dept. of Social Work –Christ College, Irinjalakkuda, Kerala was placed for block field work with Butterflies as an intern from 1st to 26th February, 2019. During his internship period he was given orientation about Butterflies, its mission vision and various programmes. As part of her fieldwork, he was placed with the contact point: Hathi Park for developing good understanding of Butterflies' work with children.

He had assisted the Child Protection Officer and Child Rights Advocate in teaching the children, taking sessions with children at contact point and conducting child social committee meeting. He had also participated in the Community Awareness Meetings, A session on Process documentation, Casework and Family Therapeutic Care, open house, bal sabha and night outreach. By participating in all these activities, he was oriented about the key values of the organisation: children participation, right based and non-institutional approach as well as methods and principles of social work practice. During this period, he prepared two assignments: 'emotional well-being of children' and a poster on the same theme.

He was able to develop a good rapport with children, parents, community as well as the staff members. We found that Mr. Farhan V.S. to be sincere, efficient and committed to his work.

With best wishes,

ABSTRACT

High figure-of-merit p-type transparent conducting Cu–Zn–S thin films with Zn doped CuS structure were successfully deposited by Successive Ionic Layer Adsorption and Reaction (SILAR) method at room temperature. Films were deposited with an optimal Cu:Zn:S ratio of 75:25:50 in the precursor solution. The thickness of the films was controlled by varying the number of deposition cycles. The composition, structure, morphology, electrical, electronic and optical properties of the as deposited films were studied in detail. All the films exhibited relatively high conductivity and transparency resulting in high figure-of-merit values. Overall, the hole concentration and conductivity are in the range of degenerately doped semiconductors. The Cu–Zn–S film deposited with 40 nm thickness has an electrical conductivity of more than 1000 S/cm and average optical transparency greater than 81% in the visible region. These values are higher than most of the other reported p-type transparent conducting materials, especially for room temperature deposition. Conventional bulk heterojunction organic solar cells were fabricated with structure ITO/Cu–Zn–S/P3HT:PC₇₁BM/ZnO/Al, where Cu–Zn–S is the hole transport layer. The best configuration resulted in an efficiency of 1.87% suggests the suitability of Cu–Zn–S thin films as a hole transport layer in organic solar cells.

1. Introduction

Transparent conducting materials (TCMs) are those materials that possess both high optical transparency and high electrical conductivity. These materials are an important component in a number of electronic devices including flat-panel displays, touchscreens, light emitting diodes (LEDs), solar cells and many other optoelectronic devices [1–3]. In LEDs and solar cells, they are typically used as low resistance electrical contacts transparent to light. The most widely used and studied TCMs are n-type semiconductors. For example, Sn-doped In₂O₃ (ITO), F-doped SnO₂ (FTO), Al-doped ZnO (AZO) are all n-type and are being used commercially in optoelectronic devices as transparent conductors [2,4]. ITO is the most extensively used TCM with optical transparency above 90% and electrical conductivity $\sim 10^4$ S/cm [3,5,6]. However, p-type semiconducting materials with comparable transparency and conductivity are not so well developed [1,4,7]. Since a p–n junction is the key building block of most semiconductor devices, p-type TCMs of similar quality could open up new design spaces for optoelectronic devices and transparent electronics [7,8].

The most reported p-type TCMs till now are Cu-based semiconducting transparent oxides. CuAlO₂, successfully deposited by Kawazoe et al., in 1997, having a room temperature conductivity of up to 1 S/cm, is regarded as the first reported p-type Transparent Conductive Oxide (TCO) [9]. A series of p-type Cu(I) based delafossites, with structure CuMO₂ (M = Ga, In, Y, Sc, Cr) were reported subsequently as optically transparent oxides initiating extensive attention to these type of materials [10–15]. However, the deposition of most of these TCO films is realized through physical deposition methods such as pulsed laser deposition (PLD), sputtering and evaporation techniques [9–15]. These methods involve a high vacuum environment, sophisticated equipment and either a

Coconut (Cocos nucifera) damage by wild pig (Sus scrofa) and Indian crested porcupine (Hystrix indica) in Central Kerala, India

Crop damage by wild animals is a serious concern faced by marginal farmers in Kerala¹. As the farmers cultivate a variety of cash crops namely coconut (Cocos nucifera), arecanut (Areca catechu) and rubber (Hevea brasiliensis) in the immediate fringe areas of the forest, damage and consumption of the fallen coconuts by wild pig (Sus scrofa) and Indian crested porcupine (Hystrix indica) is a serious issue^{1,2}. Both the species are distributed in all the forest types in India³ and reported as frequent crop raiders in Kerala⁴. Mode of feeding on coconuts by wild pig and Indian crested porcupine was not reported in the previous studies^{1,2}. Wild pig damaged a variety of crops in India^{5,6}, China⁷ and Bhutan⁸. In European countries, crop raiding was seasonal based on the type of crops cultivated⁹. Schley and Roper¹⁰ reported that wild pigs prefer agricultural crops due to their nutritive value. Indian crested porcupine damaged different crops in north India¹¹ and Pakistan¹². Chakravarthy *et al.*¹³ reported that degradation and fragmentation of the forest habitat compelled Indian crested porcupines to move to human habitations and cause damage to the crops. The study was carried out in Thrissur district (10°46'–10°7'N and 75°57'–76°55'E), central Kerala, India, as a part of a study on human–wildlife conflict from April 2009 to March 2012. The objectives of the study were to quantify the damage and consumption of fallen coconuts, with special reference to their mode of feeding and to identify the species involved in damage from the indirect evidences based on the shape and length of the discarded coconut husk.

For quantifying the damage to fallen coconuts, four quadrats of 10 m × 10 m were laid systematically in the coconut plantations up to 200 m away from the reserve forest in each forest range⁴. Ten coconut trees were marked from these plots in the Wadakkancherry, Pattikkad and Peechi forest ranges. Twenty trees in Machad forest range, 11 trees in Charpa forest range, 9 trees each in Vellikulangara and Pariyaram forest ranges and 6 trees in Palapilly forest range were marked from the plots. The presence of wild pig and Indian crested porcupine in the quadrats was recorded in each month ($n = 36$) based on the indirect evidences left by these species such as scats, droppings, diggings, feeding signs and scratching marks. The coconuts consumed/tree were also recorded during each visit. Percentage occurrence of the two species based on indirect evidences was calculated by dividing the number of occurrence of these species in the quadrats in each month by total months observed ($n = 36$) and multiplying this by 100. The shape and length of the removed mesocarp (coconut husk) was measured using vernier calipers ($n = 40$).

Wild pig was recorded from all the forest ranges in the district. Highest occurrence was recorded from Wadakkancherry forest range and the feeding on coconuts was maximum in Palapilly forest range (Figures 1 and 2). Mean coconut consumed per tree was 0.12 ± 0.15 coconut/tree/month ($n = 8$). The mode of consumption was by removing the mesocarp (husk) and endocarp and consuming the endosperm. The removed mesocarp (husk) had an irregular shape at the tip with a size of 15.01 ± 1.65 cm in length and 3.09 ± 0.73 cm in breadth ($n = 20$) (Figure 3). Coconuts were dragged to the forest before consuming them ($n = 19$). Indian crested porcupine was recorded from all the forest ranges, except Charpa forest range. The highest occurrence and damage to coconuts were recorded from Vellikulangara forest range (Figures 1 and 2). Mean coconut consumed per tree was 0.06 ± 0.09 coconut/tree/month ($n = 8$). Like the wild pig, the coconuts were damaged and

High figure-of-merit p-type transparent conducting Cu–Zn–S thin films with Zn doped CuS structure were successfully deposited by Successive Ionic Layer Adsorption and Reaction (SILAR) method at room temperature. Films were deposited with an optimal Cu:Zn:S ratio of 75:25:50 in the precursor solution. The thickness of the films was controlled by varying the number of deposition cycles. The composition, structure, morphology, electrical, electronic and optical properties of the as deposited films were studied in detail. All the films exhibited relatively high conductivity and transparency resulting in high figure-of-merit values. Overall, the hole concentration and conductivity are in the range of degenerately doped semiconductors. The Cu–Zn–S film deposited with 40 nm thickness has an electrical conductivity of more than 1000 S/cm and average optical transparency greater than 81% in the visible region. These values are higher than most of the other reported p-type transparent conducting materials, especially for room temperature deposition. Conventional bulk heterojunction organic solar cells were fabricated with structure ITO/Cu–Zn–S/P3HT:PC₇₁BM/ZnO/Al, where Cu–Zn–S is the hole transport layer. The best configuration resulted in an efficiency of 1.87% suggests the suitability of Cu–Zn–S thin films as a hole transport layer in organic solar cells.

1. Introduction

Transparent conducting materials (TCMs) are those materials that possess both high optical transparency and high electrical conductivity. These materials are an important component in a number of electronic devices including flat-panel displays, touchscreens, light emitting diodes (LEDs), solar cells and many other optoelectronic devices [1–3]. In LEDs and solar cells, they are typically used as low resistance electrical contacts transparent to light. The most widely used and studied TCMs are n-type semiconductors. For example, Sn-doped In₂O₃ (ITO), F-doped SnO₂ (FTO), Al-doped ZnO (AZO) are all n-type and are being used commercially in optoelectronic devices as transparent conductors [2,4]. ITO is the most extensively used TCM with optical transparency above 90% and electrical conductivity $\sim 10^4$ S/cm [3,5,6]. However, p-type semiconducting materials with comparable transparency and conductivity are not so well developed [1,4,7]. Since a p–n junction is the key building block of most semiconductor devices, p-type TCMs of similar quality could open up new design spaces for optoelectronic devices and transparent electronics [7,8].

The most reported p-type TCMs till now are Cu-based semiconducting transparent oxides. CuAlO₂, successfully deposited by Kawazoe et al., in 1997, having a room temperature conductivity of up to 1 S/cm, is regarded as the first reported p-type Transparent Conductive Oxide (TCO) [9]. A series of p-type Cu(I) based delafossites, with structure CuMO₂ (M = Ga, In, Y, Sc, Cr) were reported subsequently as optically transparent oxides initiating extensive attention to these type of materials [10–15]. However, the deposition of most of these TCO films is realized through physical deposition methods such as pulsed laser deposition (PLD), sputtering and evaporation techniques [9–15]. These methods involve a high vacuum environment, sophisticated equipment and either a

SHORT NOTE

ATTACK OF OTTER ON HUMANS IN THRISSUR, KERALA, INDIA

Suresh K. GOVIND and E.A. JAYSON

(received 5th February 2015, accepted 15th November 2017)

Abstract: Human-otter conflict is a rare phenomenon, but has been reported from North and South America, and the Indian sub-continent. This paper reports on three Smooth-Coated otter (Lutrogale perspicillata) attacks in Thrissur, Kerala, India, discovered during a detailed study of human-wildlife conflict which ran from April 2009 to March 2012. Focus group discussion was carried out with local people with follow-up of individual anecdotes. One fatal and two non-fatal attacks were reported; ex gratia payments to victims were sanctioned by the Kerala Forest and Wildlife Department. All attacks were by groups of otters at dawn or dusk. Two incidents were in the breeding season (August to November) and one in June 2011. The reason for the attacks appears to be territorial.

Keywords: Smooth-coated otter, human-otter conflict, Kerala, India

INTRODUCTION

Three species of otters inhabit India, and the Smooth-coated otter (Lutrogale perspicillata) is common in Kerala (Menon, 2014) and mainly feeds on fishes (Prater, 1965). Bite attacks of otters on humans were reported from North America (Lontra canadensis) (Potter et al., 2007) and South America (Pteronura brasiliensis) (McTurk and Spelman, 2005). Several anecdotal incidents of human-otter (Lontra canadensis) conflicts and rabies infection within the species were reported by Belanger et al. (2011). An attack by Smooth-coated otter at Tungabhadra, India was reported by Nagulu (1992). In this paper, Smooth-coated otter (Lutrogale perspicillata) attacking people in Thrissur District, Kerala, India is reported. Hunting of smooth-coated otter is illegal as this species is protected by the Wildlife Protection Act of India.

STUDY AREA

Thrissur District (10°46' to 10°7' N and 75°57' to 76°55' E) is in the central part of Kerala State, India, spanning an area of about 3,032 km². The District has a tropical humid climate and plentiful seasonal rainfall (2500 mm to 3500 mm). The study area is comprised of 11 Forest Ranges within three Forest Divisions namely Thrissur (210.64 km²), Chalakudy (279.71 km²) and Vazhachal (403.94 km²) and three Abstract. We give the first description of males of the jumping spider genus Piranthus Thorell, 1895, of the Indian species Piranthus planolancis Malamel, Nafin, Sudhikumar & Sebastian, 2019. Their palp is unusual in two aspects: the long embolus (longer than in most baviines) arises toward the proximal from its base before curling and proceeding distally, and the retrolateral tibial apophysis is an especially long blade. We present new illustrations of the female, and extend the range of the species from Kerala to Karnataka.

Key words. India, Salticinae, Salticoida.

Introduction

For more than a century after Thorell (1895) described the jumping spider genus Piranthus, it was known from only the single female and two juveniles of P. decorus he described from Myanmar, apart from a species misplaced in the genus (Caleb et al., 2019). Recently, P. decorus was discovered in Mumbai, India (Caleb & Sanap, 2017) and redescribed. Caleb & Sanap provided photographs of a living male, but did not have the specimen to describe. A second species of Piranthus was recently described from Kerala, P. planolancis Malamel, Nafin, Sudhikumar & Sebastian, 2019, likewise only from the female (Malamel et al., 2019). Here we provide the first description of a male Piranthus, that of P. planolancis, provide new images of female P. planolancis, and extend its range northeastward.

Material and methods

Preserved specimens were examined under both dissecting microscopes and a compound microscope with reflected light. Drawings were made by digitally tracing photographs taken using a Leica DMC4500 camera attached to Leica M205 C stereomicroscope (Kerala specimens), and a drawing tube on a Nikon ME600L compound microscope (Karnataka specimens).

Damage to paddy Oryza sativa by Indian Peafowl Pavo cristatus near Chulannur Peafowl Sanctuary, Kerala, India

Introduction

India's national bird, the Indian Peafowl Pavo cristatus (henceforth, peafowl), is listed under Schedule I of the Indian Wildlife (Protection) Act, 1972, and in Appendix I of the CITES treaty. It is omnivorous and gregarious, and is seen in open, and deciduous forests, different types of plantations, and human habitations (Ali & Ripley 1980; Grimmitt et al. 2011). It faces the threats of poaching for its meat, feathers, and for use in traditional medicines. Accidental poisoning is another major threat (Alexander 1983; del Hoyo et al. 1994; Chakkaravarthy 2002; Ramesh & McGowan 2009). Crop depredation by peafowl is a serious issue, and has been reported from some areas in India (Johnsingh & Murali 1980; Veeramani & Jayson 1995; Ogra & Badola 2008; Karanth et al. 2012; Pradhan et al. 2012). As the actual economic loss was not estimated in these studies, farmers could not claim ex-gratia payment from the wildlife authorities. The situation will be exacerbated when the wildlife authorities prioritise the needs of wild animals above the needs of humans (Madden 2004). Quantifying the damage, and immediately disbursing sufficient ex-gratia to the victims could ameliorate the human-animal conflict (Nyhus et al. 2003). In India, as mentioned above, no studies have been conducted to measure the extent of crops that peafowl damage. In this paper, an attempt has been made to study the human-peafowl conflict, with the objective of estimating the extent of paddy Oryza sativa damaged, by peafowl, near the Chulannur Peafowl Sanctuary, Kerala, India.

Study area

The Chulannur Peafowl Sanctuary (10.70°–10.73°N, 76.45°–76.48°E; henceforth, CPS) is located near Thiruvillvamala village, and comprises 3.42 km² of forests spread over the districts of Thrissur, and Palakkad (Fig. 1). The area was declared a sanctuary in 2007. Its deciduous forest, with open areas and rocky patches, offers an ideal habitat for peafowl.

Methods

We assessed the consumption of paddy, by peafowl, using the enclosure experiment of Wilson et al. (2009), which we conducted in the paddy fields adjacent to CPS. This was part of a detailed study on human-wildlife conflict in central Kerala, from

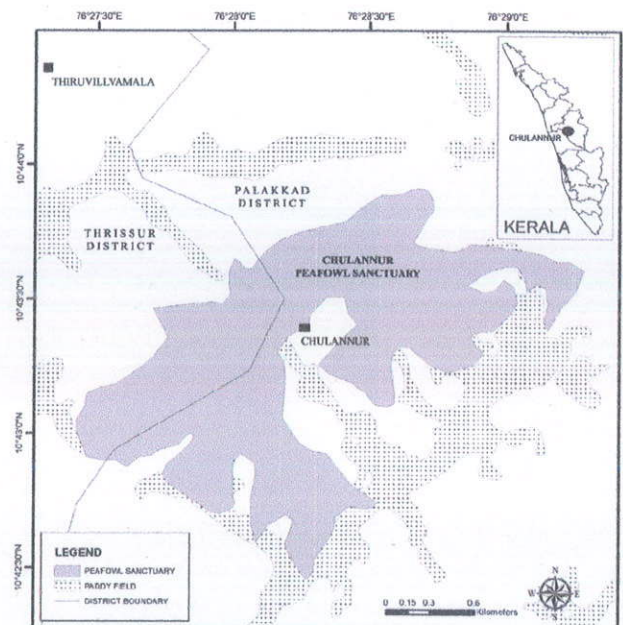

Fig. 1. Chulannur Peafowl Sanctuary, Central Kerala, India

April 2009 to March 2012.

Plots of paddy were enclosed within net-covered metallic frames (10 m x 10 m) to protect them from damage [166]. They functioned as our control plots. Paddy depredation was quantified by comparing the yield of paddy from the control plots, with that of the open plots (10 m x 10 m). Two control plots, and two open plots were monitored in four trials in December 2009, September 2010, December 2010, and September 2011, at different locations of CPS. The mean distance from the forest boundary to the area of experiment was 112.5 ± 47.87 m.

Results

Peafowl were observed feeding on paddy at dawn (0600–0900 hrs), and dusk (1600–1900 hrs), over a total time of observation of 395 hours. The birds consumed the paddy by stripping off the grain from the panicle with their beaks. The mean daily

Ensuring lasting change
for children

March 4th, 2019

TO WHOEVER IT MAY CONCERN

This is to certify that Ms. Jesna Vincent, student of Christ College, Kerala interned with CRY Chennai - Volunteer Action Division for a period of 4 weeks, during the period Feb 1st, 2019 to Feb 28th, 2019.

Jesna worked on strengthening a children's collective in Notchikuppam, a fishing hamlet along the coast of Marina Beach. She along with a team planned and conducted sessions for the children on life skills and also assisted them with their academics with special focus on subjects the children were weak in.

It was a pleasure to work with Jesna as she was always forthcoming in taking up any responsibility assigned to her. Despite language barriers, she stepped up to the challenge and was committed to the task assigned to her.

During the course of the internship period, we found Jesna to be dedicated to the work assigned to her. We hope that this Internship experience has helped sharpen her overall understanding on child rights and she would be able to perform well in any similar future assignments and remain an advocate of child rights

We trust that Jesna will continue to keep in touch with CRY and work towards the building of a Child Rights movement.

We wish her all the Best!

This is to certify that the above mentioned gentleman has been undergoing two months internship in the PE department of this school wef 13th June 2016 and he is leaving us today 15th Aug 2016 following the successful completion of his training period .

During his training period, Ashwin showcased exemplary performance in the classes he taught as well as in the campus activities. This young man has endowed with enormous energy, that I am sure will be valuable to any institution where he will be engaged.

During his tenure we also found him possessing sound conduct and character.

We wish him best in all his future endeavours.
